| FDA granted full PMA approval for Motiva implants in September 2024, unlocking the U.S. market (largest globally). Post-approval launch is ramping with surgeon adoption exceeding initial expectations. 20.3% short interest (5.9 days to cover) creates squeeze potential as fundamentals infect. | Volume dry-up from 1.08M to 296K across three weeks while price holds 2.4% from highs suggests quiet institutional accumulation ahead of U.S. launch ramp. Float is tight at 19.6M shares. Zero insider buying in last 60 days - neutral signal, but no sales either which is constructive post-FDA approval.                                                                               |

|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Thesis invalid on a close below $85.00 (base low), or if Q3 guidance implies slower-than-expected U.S. surgeon adoption. High short interest (20.3%) cuts both ways - any stumble triggers aggressive selling. Debt/equity at 1785% reflects convertible note structure typical for growth MedTech but limits financial flexibility. |

Textbook VCP: volume contracts 72.6% over three weeks (1.08M765K296K), RS line at new 52W high, price within 2.4% of pivot, tight base at 2.4. FDA approval is the fundamental unlock with U.S. ramp as ongoing catalyst. Healthcare sector leadership provides macro tailwind. Bear case: 20.3% short interest with 5.9 days to cover means any execution miss triggers violent reversal, and valuation at 11.6x P/S requires continued 40%+ growth. Conviction: High.

| Thesis invalid on a close below $21.00 (10% below pivot), or if July 29 earnings show clonoSEQ volume deceleration. Extremely high short interest (35.8%) means volatility around earnings will be elevated - position sizing critical. Beta of 2.07 amplifies market swings.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Coiled within 0.4% of pivot with RS line at 52W high and volume contracting 51% over three weeks - textbook pre-breakout accumulation. Earnings catalyst in 14 days with beat history and 35.8% short interest creates explosive upside potential. Healthcare sector leadership aligns. Base is looser than ideal (5.3) but acceptable given proximity to pivot and catalyst timing. Bear case: extreme short interest reflects real skepticism on path to profitability and clonoSEQ adoption curve - any volume miss triggers aggressive covering reversal (to downside first). | Thesis invalid on a close below $17.50 (breakdown of base), or if August 4 guidance suggests education enrollment softness. Technology sector weakness (-2.6%) is a headwind - FLYW must break out on its own fundamental merit rather than sector beta.                                                                            |

Strong VCP structure: 42.6% volume contraction, RS line at new high, 0.7% from pivot. Earnings catalyst in 20 days with serial beat history. Forward P/E of 15x is reasonable for 41% grower. However, Technology sector lagging (-2.6%) creates headwind, base is moderately loose (4.58), and vol_w2 to vol_w1 contraction is solid but not as clean as A-grade names. Bear case: education sector exposure makes name vulnerable to enrollment cycle turns; macro sensitivity to international student visa policies. Conviction: Medium.

| Thesis invalid on a close below $82.00 (breakdown of 20-day base), or if August 6 earnings show margin pressure from input costs. Consumer Defensive sector weakness (-2.5%) is meaningful headwind - SPB must break out against sector tide. 19% short interest means crowded positioning.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| GRADE UPGRADED from C to B due to C-suite insider cluster ($182K buy) in risk-on regime per GRADE UPGRADE RULE. VCP structure is solid: 36.4% volume contraction, 2.82 base_tight (good), 1.1% from pivot. However, RS line NOT at new high (+3.3% vs SPY is weak), and Consumer Defensive sector is lagging market (-2.5%). Insider conviction offsets sector headwind but doesn't fully overcome weak relative strength. Bear case: sector headwind is real - if staples continue underperforming, even insider-backed names struggle to gain traction. Conviction: Medium. |

Extreme RS (180.7) but multiple red flags: base only 1 day old, float is microscopic (100K shares), vol_dryup_strict is false, negative gross margins (-8.5%), and P/S of 51x with no revenue growth data. Earnings in 12 days but limited visibility. Speculative micro-float name - not institutional quality. Conviction: Low.

Decent vol contraction (38.2%) and base structure (3.37), but RS line NOT at new high, 3.2% from pivot is borderline, and forward P/E of 23x on negative TTM earnings reflects turnaround hopes not yet proven. Earnings in 12 days - wait for print to assess demand trends. Conviction: Low.
