| Today's 38% surge driven by positive clinical data release or partnership speculation in the GLP-1/obesity space. Forward catalyst: October 28 earnings (35 days) expected to provide Phase 2b trial updates or partnership announcement timeline; major de-risking event if topline data announced or deal materialized in Q4 2026.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |

| Viking Therapeutics is a clinical-stage biotech developing VK2735, a novel dual GLP-1/GIP receptor agonist targeting obesity and metabolic disease, competing directly with Eli Lilly and Novo Nordisk in the >$100B obesity market. The company is positioned as a potential acquisition target for big pharma seeking GLP-1 pipeline depth.                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

| Direct exposure to the GLP-1/obesity mega-theme, one of the highest-conviction secular tailwinds in biopharma with 20%+ annual growth projections through 2030. Theme momentum remains white-hot despite crowding, with multiple Phase 3 readouts and M&A activity (e.g., Roche/Carmot $2.7B) accelerating sector rotation into clinical-stage names.                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Massive 6.2x volume spike on 38% move indicates institutional block buying, not retail FOMO-this is smart money repositioning ahead of a binary catalyst. No insider buying in last 90 days (cluster score 0), which is typical for pre-commercial biotech under quiet period; focus remains on trial data and partnership optionality as the institutional thesis drivers.                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| October 28 earnings will focus on cash runway, trial enrollment updates, and partnership discussions rather than revenue (pre-commercial). Last four quarters showed no earnings surprises (development-stage company); the key metric is clinical milestone achievement and balance sheet strength to fund trials through Phase 3.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Disconfirming evidence: RS line NOT at new high despite proximity to 52W high (96.1%), and the wide base (7.7 vs. ideal <2.0) suggests volatility rather than controlled accumulation-this is a volatile biotech momentum trade, not a Qullamaggie coil. The 38% single-day spike on likely data/rumor creates extension risk into the Oct 28 print. However, GLP-1 theme strength, massive institutional volume, and clear binary catalyst path (trial data + partnership optionality) make this a tradeable momentum setup for risk-tolerant accounts. Conviction: Medium. |

| Catalyst / Today's DriverToday's 26% breakout likely driven by sector rotation into Communications (which is still lagging at -0.2% vs SPY, creating early-mover edge) or product/partnership announcement in gaming/multimedia space. Forward catalyst: November 12 earnings (50 days) and potential holiday-season product launch or user-growth inflection in gaming vertical.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Business &amp; PositionFiry operates in electronic gaming and multimedia, likely a platform or content play in the digital entertainment ecosystem. With a micro-cap ($220M) and tiny float (9.1M), this is a highly volatile, thinly traded name susceptible to momentum squeezes and crowding risk.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Factor &amp; ThemeExposure to Communications sector (lagging mega-caps at -0.2% vs SPY, creating contrarian value) and gaming/digital entertainment, which has seen renewed interest post-AI integration announcements across the industry. Theme momentum is mixed-gaming hardware/software bifurcating, with AI-driven content creation and immersive platforms outperforming legacy publishers.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| InstitutionalVolume 3.2x average on 26% move suggests coordinated buying, but the tiny float (9.1M) and micro-cap status mean this is likely family-office or retail-driven, not bulge-bracket institutional demand. Zero insider buying (cluster 0) in last 90 days is a yellow flag-management not putting skin in the game at current levels despite the RS line hitting new highs.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

| Earnings ContextNovember 12 earnings (50 days out) will be the first post-breakout fundamental test; no historical beat/miss data provided, and as a micro-cap, consensus estimates are likely sparse or unreliable. Key metric: user growth, monetization trends, and any strategic partnership announcements that validate the current valuation.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Key RiskThesis invalid if November 12 earnings miss or reveal weak user retention/monetization, or if gaming sector rotation reverses as mega-cap Tech continues to suck liquidity from SMID. Technical stop: close below $10.80 (approximate 20-day MA), which would negate the breakout and trigger float-rotation out of this tiny name.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| AnalysisDisconfirming evidence: Base is extremely wide (8.11 vs. ideal <2.0), indicating high volatility and lack of institutional VCP-style accumulation; the 67.2% proximity to 52W high means there's still 33% overhead supply to absorb. Offsetting positives: RS line at new high (true leadership signal) and extraordinary +55.9 vs SPY outperformance confirm this is a genuine relative-strength leader. Tiny float creates squeeze potential but also crash risk. Communications sector lagging gives rotation runway. Conviction: Medium (high technical grade offset by micro-cap illiquidity and lack of insider conviction). |

| Today's modest 5% move on 3x volume suggests continuation of multi-day breakout rather than single-day news pop; likely driven by crypto/blockchain sector rotation or regulatory clarity (e.g., SEC framework for tokenized securities). Forward catalyst: November 11 earnings (49 days) and potential institutional adoption announcements as real-world asset (RWA) tokenization accelerates into year-end 2026.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |

| Volume 3x average with only 5% price move suggests absorptive accumulation-institutions buying without spiking price, classic smart-money setup. Tiny float (8.4M) creates illiquidity premium and squeeze potential if crypto rallies. Zero insider buying (cluster 0) in last 90 days is a concern-management not backing up the blockchain narrative with personal capital at these levels.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| November 11 earnings (49 days) will be critical to validate revenue traction from RWA tokenization; as a software platform, look for platform fees, AUM growth, and institutional client wins. No historical beat/miss data provided; consensus likely sparse given the niche market and recent public listing/merger.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| Thesis invalid if crypto/blockchain sentiment reverses (e.g., regulatory crackdown, Bitcoin breakdown below $50K support) or if November 11 earnings show weak institutional adoption despite the RWA hype. Technical stop: close below $12.50 invalidates the 95.3% proximity to highs and triggers de-risking in this illiquid float.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

| Disconfirming evidence: Base is wide (7.11), and the +9.8 RS vs SPY is solid but not exceptional-this isn't a runaway leader like FIRY (+55.9). Offsetting positives: RS line at new high confirms leadership, 95.3% proximity to 52W high is institutional breakout zone, and the RWA tokenization theme has genuine multi-year secular legs with regulatory/institutional tailwinds building. Tiny float (8.4M) is double-edged: squeeze fuel but also gap-down risk. Technology sector leadership (+7.4% vs SPY) provides macro tailwind. Conviction: Medium (strong theme and technical setup, but lack of insider buying and wide base limit conviction to swing-trade rather than core position). |

| Catalyst / Today's Driver Today's 15% surge on 8x volume likely driven by restructuring announcement, asset sale, or operational turnaround progress in the industrial conglomerate portfolio. Forward catalyst: October 28 earnings (35 days) expected to show margin improvement, debt reduction, or strategic portfolio rationalization; potential M&amp;A target given distressed valuation.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
| Business &amp; Position NN Inc. is a diversified industrial manufacturer serving automotive, aerospace, and general industrial end-markets with precision metal and plastic components. The company has been restructuring for multiple years, divesting non-core assets and focusing on high-margin specialty components; at $320M market cap, it's a potential acquisition target for larger industrials seeking bolt-on capacity.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Factor &amp; Theme Exposure to aerospace cycle recovery (defense spending +5% annually, commercial aerospace build rates recovering) and potential reshoring/onshoring tailwinds as supply chains localize. Industrials sector neutral to lagging in current macro; no obvious secular growth driver beyond cyclical recovery and internal operational improvement.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

| Institutional Massive 8.0x volume spike is the standout data point-this is not gradual accumulation but event-driven repositioning, suggesting a restructuring milestone, insider knowledge of upcoming announcement, or short-squeeze mechanics (short interest data not provided). Zero insider buying (cluster 0) in last 90 days is a significant red flag for a turnaround story-management should be buying aggressively if they truly believe in the recovery thesis.                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| Earnings Context October 28 earnings (35 days) will be the first post-breakout fundamental test; focus on free cash flow, debt paydown, and segment margin trends rather than top-line growth (cyclical exposure limits revenue visibility). No beat/miss history provided; turnaround names often sandbag and beat, but execution risk remains elevated.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Key Risk Thesis invalid if October 28 earnings disappoint on margins or cash flow, revealing that today's move was speculative positioning rather than fundamental improvement. Industrial conglomerates often face 'sum-of-parts' discount and execution risk. Technical stop: close below $3.40 (approximate 20-day MA) negates breakout.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| Analysis Disconfirming evidence: RS line NOT at new high despite strong +41.4 vs SPY, and Industrials sector is not in favor (lagging Technology and Energy). The 3.17 base width is wider than ideal VCP specs, and zero insider buying is a glaring omission for a turnaround thesis-management should be loading the boat if they believe the breakout is sustainable. Offsetting positives: 8.0x volume is institutional-grade event-driven activity, 85.9% proximity to 52W high puts it in breakout zone, and October 28 earnings provide a near-term binary catalyst to validate the move. This is a tactical trade into earnings, not a conviction hold. Conviction: Low-Medium. |
