| Current move driven by technical breakout from a textbook coil (base_tight 2.17) with RS line hitting new highs, signaling institutional sponsorship ahead of the market. Forward catalyst: August 7 earnings (11 days) represents the next inflection point for pre-commercial biotech guidance updates, clinical trial milestones, or cash runway clarity that can extend momentum into development catalysts through year-end.                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| First Tracks Biotherapeutics is a clinical-stage biotechnology company focused on developing novel therapeutics, likely in oncology or immunology given the sector's recent strength. With a $1.5B market cap and strong RS leadership (131% outperformance vs SPY), the company is commanding a growth-stage premium ahead of potential pipeline value inflection.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Biotechnology innovation and precision medicine tailwinds remain structurally intact despite broader market volatility. Clinical-stage biotech with RS line at new highs typically signals smart money positioning ahead of binary data or partnership events. Theme momentum is stable, not accelerating, but sector rotation into defensively-positioned healthcare provides support.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Volume surge to 2.56x average on a +19.8% day indicates institutional block accumulation, not retail chasing-the float is 31M shares and this is a $1.5B company requiring real capital deployment. No insider buying in the last 90 days is common for pre-commercial biotechs under blackout or holding concentrated founder positions. The RS line at 52-week high is Qullamaggie's #1 early leader signal, confirming institutional sponsorship before the crowd arrives.                                                                                                                                                                |

| Five technical criteria met: vol >2.5x, prox_52w 91.6, rs_line_new_high TRUE, rs_vs_spy +131, base_tight 2.17. Disconfirming evidence: biotech sector is not among the week's leading sectors (Energy/Financials/Real Estate leading), and the mixed macro regime typically punishes speculative, pre-revenue names. However, the technical setup is textbook-RS line at new high, tight VCP coil, institutional volume-and the August 7 earnings provides a near-term catalyst for guided follow-through. Conviction: Medium. The setup is A-grade on technicals, but macro headwinds and lack of sector tailwind cap conviction below High. |

| Current move is a technical breakout from a tight base (2.49 ATR range) with RS line at new highs, suggesting institutional accumulation ahead of a known catalyst. Forward catalyst: August 12 earnings (16 days) is the immediate high-impact event. Personal services exposure may tie to consumer spending normalization; any guidance raise on margin expansion or unit growth can extend the re-rating into Q4.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| Consumer discretionary recovery and services sector resilience provide modest tailwinds, though consumer spending data remains mixed in the current macro regime. If Andersen is a home services or improvement play, it benefits from housing stock age and repair/remodel cycles. Theme momentum is neutral; consumer services are not among the week's leaders (Energy/Financials/Real Estate).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |

| Volume at 1.53x average is the lowest in this A/B cohort, but the tight 10.9M float means modest absolute volume can represent meaningful percentage ownership shifts. No insider buying in the last 90 days is notable for a founder-led or family-controlled services business, where insider conviction is often a differentiator. RS line at new high is the key institutional signal, confirming smart money is positioned ahead of the August 12 earnings catalyst.                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

| Four of five A-grade criteria met: prox_52w 99.2, rs_line_new_high TRUE, rs_vs_spy +37.8, base_tight 2.49 (textbook VCP coil). Volume at 1.53x is the weakest link, just below the 2.0x threshold for explosive breakouts. Disconfirming evidence: consumer services is not a leading sector this week, and the mixed macro regime typically punishes discretionary consumer exposure. However, the technical setup is pristine-RS line at new high, tight base, 16 days to a catalyst-and the small float creates squeeze potential if earnings deliver. Conviction: Medium. The setup earns an A on technicals and catalyst proximity, but macro and sector headwinds prevent high conviction. |

| Current move driven by July 23 earnings report (4 days ago), likely an EPS/revenue beat or guidance raise given the +11% gap and RS line at new highs. Forward catalyst path: the stock is now in a post-earnings digestion phase; next catalyst is Q3 earnings (~late October), approximately 90 days out. Intermediate catalysts include any partnership announcements (AI feature rollouts, enterprise UCaaS wins) or analyst upgrades as firms raise targets post-beat.                                                                                                                          |

| RingCentral is a leading provider of cloud-based unified communications as a service (UCaaS), competing with Zoom, Microsoft Teams, and legacy telecom. With $4.5B market cap and 97% proximity to 52-week highs, the company is re-rating as a category consolidator in the cloud communications space, likely benefiting from enterprise IT spending normalization and AI-driven product differentiation.                                                                                                                                                                                         |

| Cloud software and digital transformation remain structurally supported, though not in the week's leading sectors. AI feature integration (real-time transcription, sentiment analysis, meeting summaries) is a potential differentiation vector. | Volume at 2.0x average on an +11% earnings gap suggests institutional participation, though not the explosive 3-5x seen in pure momentum breakouts. The 72.5M float and $4.5B market cap require real capital; this is not a micro-cap pump. No insider buying in the last 90 days is neutral for a liquid large-cap SaaS name. RS line at new high confirms the earnings beat was institutional-quality, not a one-day retail spike.                                                                                                                                                               |

| Reported July 23. Specific consensus and beat history not provided, but the +11% gap and RS line at new high strongly imply a material beat and/or raise. RingCentral has historically been volatile on earnings; if this is a turnaround narrative (returning to growth after margin compression), the re-rating can extend through year-end.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Strong technicals: vol 2.0x, prox_52w 97.3, rs_line_new_high TRUE, rs_vs_spy +29.6. However, base_tight at 6.34 is wide (well above the 2.0 VCP threshold), indicating the setup was not a textbook coil but rather a choppy, news-driven gap. Disconfirming evidence: the catalyst (earnings) has been exhausted; next earnings is 90 days out, leaving a potential air pocket. The RS line at new high upgrades this from C to B, but the wide base and post-earnings timing prevent an A. Conviction: Medium. This is a momentum follow-through candidate if the gap holds, not a fresh breakout. |

| Immersion Corporation is a haptic technology IP licensing company, monetizing touch-feedback patents across gaming controllers, automotive interfaces, mobile devices, and emerging AR/VR platforms. With a $250M market cap and 27.3M float, the company is a micro-cap royalty model dependent on licensing deal flow and legal enforcement of its patent portfolio.                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| AR/VR and automotive HMI (human-machine interface) themes provide modest tailwinds as next-gen interfaces proliferate. Gaming hardware cycles (PlayStation, Xbox, Nintendo) and automotive electrification (haptic steering, touchscreens) are incremental revenue drivers. Theme momentum is stable but niche; haptics is not a primary market focus in the current macro environment.                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Volume at 5.02x average on a +15.7% move suggests some institutional participation, though the $250M market cap and 27.3M float limit fund capacity. No insider buying in the last 90 days is concerning for an IP licensing business, where management conviction on deal pipeline is a key signal. The lack of RS line at new high (despite prox_52w 97.8%) downgrades this from A to B-technical strength without RS confirmation suggests a lagging move, not leadership.                                                                                                   |

| Thesis invalid on a close back below $6.80 (approximate breakout pivot from the base), or on any licensing pipeline disappointment or legal setback at the September 14 print. IP licensing businesses carry binary legal risk; an adverse patent ruling can impair the entire royalty stream.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |

| Strong volume (5.02x) and prox_52w (97.8%) meet B-grade criteria, but rs_line_new_high FALSE is the critical downgrade-this is not a market leader. Disconfirming evidence: base_tight 3.78 is loose (above the 2.0 VCP threshold), no visible news catalyst for today's move, and earnings are 49 days out (no near-term catalyst to drive follow-through). The mixed macro regime and lack of sector leadership (Tech not among this week's leaders) further cap conviction. This is a follow-through candidate if volume persists, but not a fresh breakout. Conviction: Low. |
